

ABSTRACT

In one embodiment, a digital imaging device comprises an imaging subsystem for capturing video frames, a motion sensor for detecting movement of the device, and encoding logic for encoding video frames from the imaging subsystem according to a motion compensation compression algorithm, wherein the encoding logic determines motion vectors by displacing interframe search areas using information from the motion sensor.